NEW LOOK FOR THE FREELANCER CHRONOGRAPH

Swiss independent watchmaker RAYMOND WEIL introduces the latest freelancer timepiece with a distinctive personality. This new chronograph model was reinterpreted with legibility and design in mind.

The freelancer chronograph is one of RAYMOND WEIL's most technical collections. Assembled with care by RAYMOND WEIL's master watchmakers and meeting all luxury standards of the Swiss label, this men's automatic self-winding freelancer boasts the Calibre RW5200 chronograph movement. It has a 48-hour power reserve and beats at a frequency of 28,800 vibrations per hour.

Housed in a round 42mm titanium-coloured stainless steel case, this new vintage-inspired freelancer chronograph offers a day date window at 3 o'clock, and a circular tachymeter scale. The deep blue satin-brushed dial contrasts the three beige chronograph counters and is completed by prominent nickel plated indexes matched perfectly by the slender hands. The Super-LumiNova® coated hands and indexes allow for full readability in the dark. The dial is protected by a sapphire crystal with anti-reflective coating providing maximum durability and visibility.

The freelancer 7732-TIC-50421 comes equipped with a genuine brown calf leather strap adding a natural charm to this timepiece. The strap is secured by a stainless-steel folding clasp with a double push-button safety system. This model maintains the collection's signature attributes: finely tapered horns that curve comfortably to the wrist and the external chronograph pushers. The screwed-down steel case back with sapphire crystal creates an air tight seal providing a water resistance up to 100 meters.

This brand-new freelancer chronograph asserts its vintage personality with an inverted color scheme but still boast the modern complications of the collection. This iconic watch is the perfect cross-section between functionality and style. RAYMOND WEIL once again continues to promote its iconic freelancer collection synonymous of independence and elegance.
